I've always thought that when you need to isolate something from a system you shouldn't use the command prompt but that's certainly not always possible. In this scenario you can use the user32.dll to take a snapshot of what you want to isolate from the system. This tool is designed to be a stand-alone application but I've also created a tiny script I use as a live cd for my computers so I can easily archive whole files. Would you prefer to use your CD-RW/DVD drive with your USB DV-W853D to swap your data? This is the ideal solution. You may want to use a batch file to automate the task, but you can also use a USB startup key to complete the job quicker. Use a batch file to automate the process so that it will happen at boot time. This could mean that you don't have to find a USB startup key whenever you need to swap your optical drive. I would always recommend that you backup your data before doing anything like this just in case you mess things up but if you do get a new startup key, it is always a good idea to run a backup of your data before you swap your DVD drive. This handy little tool I've created will allow you to take a snapshot of all your temp files, system files, registry entries and all other data you no longer need to use. As I reviewed the downloading process, I did some research on the product, and found other reviews. I found out that some of the reviews were misleading, and others were not – some results by downloading the trial version, and some results by subscribing. I don't want to just write "This software works fine, don't worry", because the software really doesn't work. I want to tell you, "This software works, but it doesn't work properly, don't use it, and be aware of the risks you are about to run." While installing CUPTo, I was asked which codecs I would like to install. I told them I would install the standard ones for Windows Media Player, including Real Audio/Video, Real Audio Streaming, MPEG-4 Audio/Video, QuickTime 7, Windows Media Audio, Windows Media Video and Windows Media Services. The software said the encoder was Real Media Audio/Video RMAV-Lite. Real Audio/Video (and QuickTime) are codecs, not encoders.
