Surface-enhanced scattering of light by gold nanoparticles on glass. We report on the surface-enhanced scattering of light by 20 nm spherical gold nanoparticles on glass. This scattering is observed by reflection and a second resonance is observed in the transmission spectrum in the red spectral range. We use a microscopic model to model the experimental results and show that the enhancement of the scattering due to surface plasmon polaritons is due to "light accumulation" effects at the surface. We also study the possibility of interpreting an equivalent Fabry-Pérot resonance by more sophisticated quasi-static calculations.

The basic life support (BLS) of healthcare institutions is important for the improvement of early response to patients with cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR), the early recognition of life-threatening conditions, and the care of patients with life-threatening conditions. In order to improve the quality of BLS education, the Korean Resuscitation Council (KRC), which is the national body for early response and CPR programs, sought to develop a new teaching scale for BLS in healthcare institutions in the Republic of Korea. The BLS-Teaching Scales for Healthcare Institutions that were developed by the KRC were used to survey BLS education for healthcare professionals in healthcare institutions in the Republic of Korea. Through this, the usage of BLS-Teaching Scales for Healthcare Institutions was evaluated for curriculums and teaching methods, and the results of the survey were used to formulate BLS curriculums for healthcare professionals in healthcare institutions. All patients received subcutaneous doses of rhG-CSF at 3 micrograms/kg/day (6 micrograms/kg/day if \geq 75 years of age). One patient with CML-CP died of infection at day 11 of therapy.
