With this is a question. What's when it´s possible to create the. keygen... what i'm trying to do is creating a program. It uses the Xforce is called Sample 3D Modeler... which i need to make it.. it's on Xforce 3ds max 2011 crackey A: you don't need to generate keys. Just download the plugin from the official site of X-Force and use it to generate the keys after. I think this is the most important information you should have. Q: Redirecting user to different flash based on POST variables I am trying to take advantage of flash to make a user experience more vivid and engaging. What I need to do: Display very short message that appears for a fraction of a second (like a small greeting, or a price message) Depending on whether the user takes or rejects the offer, the whole flash will disappear. What I need to do: Use PHP POST variables to decide which message is displayed; Make the flash fallback to the initial, default message if a POST variable is not set; My question: Is there any way to properly send POST variables to flash? (any third-party plugins/free php solutions?!) If there is no way of sending POST variables directly to flash, please write a detailed description why (I've tried, but most of the articles I found were describing how to display things inside a flash, not how to control it). If there is way, please describe how to do it (I'm pretty new to flash, and I already found "How to pass flash with $_POST and POST") A: The short answer, is 'no, you cannot pass POST variables to Flash'. What you can do however, is set a flag in the flash based on the response of the form and then display that in your flash. I would recommend using some Javascript as well. You could have an alert box in your php, to say the user has either accepted or rejected the offer, and then having the flash automatically appear.
