ANNOUNCEMENT {#s1} ===== Genus Burkholderia (order Burkholderiales, family Burkholderiaceae) encompasses diverse microorganisms that have been implicated in the symbiosis with plants and animals ([@B1]). Bacterial strains of the genus have been frequently isolated from environmental sources and are associated with human diseases ([@B2], [@B3]). Burkholderia species can cause disease in insects and other animals, and these can infect humans ([@B4], [@B5]). Here, we report the genome sequence of Burkholderia siderophoreia, a fluorescent Burkholderiaceae strain isolated from a Lutzomyia longipalpis female (triatomine bug) that had blood-engorged on the mesonotum and wing veins of a Miraflores, Burela, Colombia, insectary colony. The L. longipalpis colony was maintained with females fed through a membrane-covered feeding system using rabbits as blood sources, as previously described by Gomes et al. ([@B6]). This colony has been maintained for 5 years, and the insectary is maintained at 27°C, 60% relative humidity, and with a 12:12-h light:dark photoperiod ([@B6], [@B7]). For genomic DNA extraction, we used the DNeasy UltraClean microbial kit (Qiagen) according to the manufacturer's instructions and sequenced the DNA genome using a MiSeq platform (Illumina), with 200-bp paired-end sequencing. A total of 13,164,712 reads were analyzed for quality control and error correction using Quast v3.0 ([@B8]). The Velvet v1.2.10 ([@B9]) de novo assembler program was used for de novo assembly. The assembly consists of 13 contigs of an average size of 24,092 bases. The *N*₅₀ is 35,129 bases, with the smallest contig size being 750 bases and the largest contig size being 157,682 bases. The total genome size is 7,038,966 bases, with a G+C content of 67.84%. In the genome, BLASTn searches were performed using the nonredundant database, G+C content, and similarity by the NCBI server ([@B10]

At the end Jimmy Graham has found a home. New Orleans received a flood of good news earlier in the week when star running back Mark Ingram returned to the field. The quarterback still is not set, with Sean Payton starting the first game of the season while Taysom Hill will replace Will Glazer for the second consecutive year. Glazer, the sixth pick the 2008 draft, looked very shaky in his debut. Somewhere, the question nags about "What If?" West Virginia quarterback Geno Smith, anointed after the death of Tyrod Taylor last season, a glimpse into the future. Smith did play two impressive games last year, but is not perfect. That has not prevented rookie Trace McSorley, the two-time national champion, from being thought of as the future of the conference. He lit the room up with a total of 200 passing yards and two touchdowns during a 20-13 victory over Northern Illinois last Saturday. "I'm practicing like I am going to play," McSorley said. "I enjoy the competition. I enjoy being able to battle for a spot to get on the field. In the second game, I like the help that I get from the veterans Tom Savage and Tony Pike." It might not be long before McSorley is the Steelers' vaunted traveling damage-control crew. Rather than one of the best young quarterbacks in the country when Anthony Menezes went down with a season-ending shoulder injury against Northwestern, Kirk Herbstreit received a pleasant surprise when McSorley stepped on the field. "Sometimes, you get a great opportunity to see your guy," Herbstreit said. "You don't want to mess up." McSorley is the most impressive quarterback to
