Q: Nautilus generates tp:// URLs for icons I'm using Ubuntu 16.10, Nautilus 3.24.4, and I recently noticed something that seems strange to me. Whenever I try to drag files to the Trash via Nautilus, it instead generates tp:// URLs. I cannot open the URLs either. They just show the word "Unknown" in the address bar. A: I had the same problem a few days ago and you can fix this by creating a new.desktop file, probably in `~/local/share/applications/`. You can simply rename the existing file to prevent it from getting overwritten. Open your terminal and navigate to the desired directory with `cd ~/local/share/applications/`. Then edit the existing file using the following: `nautilus -q` Once the file is opened (it may be closed by Nautilus by itself), remove the `tp://` part in the URL field using: `gksudo gedit /usr/share/applications/org.gnome.Nautilus.desktop` and replace it with the icon path. Try and drag the new icon for yourself or use your file manager to save the file. This should work, but it's not officially supported by Ubuntu/GNOME. The problem with "Game of Thrones" is that it doesn't really remind people to eat, drink and be merry. The sex and violence are pretty much the least of it. The show has pretty much plunged the entire world into a bit of a chasm: They are paranoid of their food shortages (though really, there are a lot of people starving in the world today), and everyone has developed certain terrors, including one character who's tough love routine is probably the most obnoxious in the entire show. Then, there are times when they mention death. A lot of death. In fact, more often than not, it is probably the best thing that happens to our favorite characters. So, on January 15, in honor of "Game of Thrones" premiering on HBO in a few weeks, and celebrating Movember because I don't really care if you look like a scruffy little camel poop, here are some things you should probably eat or do before you watch the best show on television on a regular basis. 1. Eat turkey. Someone actually described the Red Wedding as an episode of "Dexter." It's true! I've never seen anyone else's reaction to that particular episode quite like I've seen the reaction of men, mostly, in my family to that scene. But anyhow, however that might have been intended, a TV character — or character in general — that is so gruesomely killed that his audience is forced to use Nix to put him out of their misery (creating a nimbus of light around him) is a lot scarier than death by poison or decapitation or anything else. You can chalk that one up to good writing, good character development, excellent acting, sound audio editing and a few other very grand things. "Game of Thrones" on the other hand, is mostly just sick and depraved. She may have not much of a heart, but she's a great character to watch again and again and again. 2. Drink. Jorah Mormont is a very pessimistic man. It's what separates him from the other
