Inorganic carbon (IC) may be transported to groundwater in the form of mineral, organic or dissolved forms. Inorganic carbon occurs in groundwater in many forms, including CO₂, CO₃ (OH)₂, HCO₃⁻ and CO₃²⁻ species. The goal of this study is to determine the concentration and spectroscopic properties of dissolved inorganic carbon (DIC) in different types of groundwater (brackish, saline, fresh and sea water). Groundwater samples were collected from eight groundwater types in Ontario Canada. Sodium carbonate and hydrogen carbonate were used to prepare carbonated (10 mL of 0.1M NaHCO₃) and carbonated adjusted (20 mL of 0.1M NaHCO₃) solutions (CS) for quantification of DIC. Carbonate carbon was estimated as the difference between measured DIC and CS. DIC was measured using a DIC titration method and a potentiometric method. Optical absorption spectroscopy (VIS, NIR and fluorescence) and NMR measurements were carried out to study the spectral properties of DIC in groundwater. IC concentration varied from 3.6 mg/L to 240 mg/L with a mean of 58.5 mg/L in the fresh water samples. Salinity has a significant effect on DIC concentrations in fresh water. Salinity has a strong effect on carbonate carbon concentrations in solution, and DIC concentration increases with salinity. The effect of salinity on DIC is less significant in brackish and sea waters
