Sorry, not my fault. I hope you enjoy this :) User Info: DSong LM 20 years ago #24 LifeRocker_26 Member 2 years ago #25 I decided to give this new version a shot, and I had a much worse experience than i thought I would. After i managed to install SR3, patches for web, and got most gems, it would randomly crash at the end of a match. Since this is a very common issue with smaller game updates, I started digging into it. I logged into the web section, and saw that this game is using texture locking to resolve the resolution issue they had earlier. I found the folder right where it was installed, and got the following information: "The appension error could not be solved! Could not find any classes in the project. Unpaired classes (1) CAA,OBI,OBC,OBN,OBA,StdLib,StdStr,StdTable,Courier" In the file, the only class that was in there was "GLGame" which, for some reason, was stripped of all methods. I cannot find anyone who experienced this issue (or even noticed) so I'm not really certain if it was a lost cause. I would suggest to the developer that he notify the user instead of ignoring them, and that he might aswell stop taking requests of patches as he made no progress

Office is a governmental authority of the Japanese prefecture of Kyoto. The general office is mainly in charge of the government headquarters within the prefecture. Before the establishment of the general office and secretariat, there was no general government office in Kyoto, and the governor of the prefecture of Kyoto could do only executive functions. In 1992, the prefectural government was moved to the newly established prefectural government. From the establishment of the general office until the restructuring of the government of Kyoto in September 2011, the general office was called. However, in October 2011, as part of the restructuring, the general office was renamed in accordance with the unification of the governments of the six prefectures around Kyoto. In addition to the administration of the governor of the prefecture, the general office is also in charge of regional development, economic revitalization, promotion of the Kyoto experience and support for education, culture, and welfare.

History Before the establishment of the prefectural government, the governor-general of the prefecture of Kyoto exercised duties more or less as an executive office. As the governor was in charge of civil affairs, agriculture, finances, police, and public works, only he could give orders in the prefectural government. Some officials exercised their functions at the pleasure of a single governor, while others exercised their functions with the permission of the governor-general. Beginnings The establishment of a prefectural government began with the reforms proposed by the prime minister Kiyoura Keigo in the aftermath of the Great Kantō earthquake of 1 November 1923. After cabinet reshuffling in June, a new law came into effect on 22 June. The law related to localities in and outside the prefecture's boundaries, and the law related to the establishment of the central and local offices of a prefectural government. The prefectural government of Kyoto was made on 1 September 1924. The prefecture's administration was presided over by the governor of Kyoto (setsumitei) who also became the governor-general of the prefecture. The existence of a prefectural governorship and other gubernatorial functions, such as legislation, agencies, departments and their administration, was abolished. The prefectural government consists of a jisha (central bureau) and eight local governments. The local governments include prefectural boards of education, local wards, towns and villages. The Governorship headquarters of the prefecture consists of regional offices and district offices that are in charge
