Website for Sale and Needs Attention I am thinking about selling my website but I need someone to fix the image links and the positioning. There is one image that has changed the background which is out of my control. There are three image links that need to be re-positioned - I cannot edit those. The server is on a not so very good host and I need a host that is inexpensive and has support. I am not open to any contracts. Also, I am unable to open the site myself until I receive the correct host/configuration, which I have not received yet. Q: Failing to Yoshikawa expects a revolution to come as well. As the radicalization of students continues to spread across the land, students at Kamihiro's school begin to take matters into their own hands, arming themselves with guns and revolvers in order to do more than just complain. However, Kanon is holding onto the optimism that things can change for the better. After entering a new world, you will meet a new town, new allies and foes, and new challenges along the way. You will start to develop the relationships with these people in the new town, and explore the new world from your own perspective. It also introduces a new kind of RPG, which can change depending on who you meet in the town and what you do.

What's new in My House:

We are three grumbling young heroes armed with swords, spears, and large wooden staves. We enter an abandoned fortress littered with temple carvings. It is like a three-pronged fork in the road, leading us to one of three multiple paths leading to a single end. We prepare ourselves. The doors to the castle open with a wooden creak. A blonde haired young man in a brown hoodie looks out at us. "Hello there. I must warn you, I don't like adventurers, or outlanders!" Yesterday was Thanksgiving, and so to make up for not getting around to posting in the month of November, I am posting a little something special. It's called: "Yes, ask, get what you need, and get out!" This piece is a direct result of me re-reading the pages of the comic book from a few days ago. I love when the Batman and Superman work together, and this comic is presented in a way that lets that enjoyment shine. So, without further adieu, lets just get to: "Yes, ask and get what you need and get out" I, frankly, was pleasantly surprised, due to the circumstances that the story was told in that this was all over the place. It was more disjointed than I was expecting, and so I was also more disjointed in how I was going to actually fit this in. Trouble is, I could not go off story without accounting for the bald black haired kid that was tossed out of a window. So I did. I went off story and inserted a five minute battle against three dudes with bat-arangs, a couple of snarky comments, and then finally get the heroes to talk about what it's like to be a superhero. This page was somewhat over a page, but it ended being around five times the size of it's original self. Overall, it was satisfying, and I know that many times with stories I'll need to trim them down to a tighter size. However, in this story it actually served its purpose. After the comic was completed, I looked through the comic book and chose about two dozen panels that I personally pulled from the pages of the recent issue. They did this right in the middle of the story, and so I thought it would be

The game is primarily played through 'turns', with each turn being equivalent to 8 hours, either side taking 8 hours. A turn is usually equivalent to several days in reality. Movement is split into Patrols, the idea being that you patrol over the whole map every turn. This is done on the '3x3' grid style map to provide the most immersion into a realistic wartime experience Each Patrol takes a few turns to complete - this should usually take a few hours in reality. Each Patrol has a faction to play for, and can take a whole turn to complete - thus lasting 8 hours. Each Patrol is made up of individual units. Each unit can move up to a certain number of hexes per turn - this is called the faction 'Unit Turn'. Each unit can make up to 4 moves per turn - this is called the faction 'Move Turn' Each unit can travel a maximum distance for the faction 'Move' turn, and not have to reach an end point, known as the faction 'End'. Each faction has a morale value, which can go down over a number of moves, possibly having many sub-morale effects, or all going to 0. The morale values (also known as faction morale) are not saved anywhere, meaning the losses can be all gone in just one turn. Each unit has a morale - each turn the morale goes down for all units that have made moves in that turn, and the morale value for the whole turn is the actual morale value. Each unit is assigned a faction turn. This dictates which side each unit can move for, usually in the orders of British and Irish Volunteers. Each unit has a morale value. Morale is calculated every turn, and each unit has a morale limit - this is the number of moves they can take. A unit can be assigned
