  "The written word kills most of us. It is a great educator, but an appalling disciplinarian. The man who can read but has no imagination soon begins to read the dictionary. And he who can read that and have no imagination is a slave. And there is nothing so enslaving as the imagination.

"But what can you do? One word and the world falls apart. A sentence and it goes back together again. It's the way words work and for hours I've been watching them repeat over and over, falling, tearing, healing, like something terrible growing stronger and stronger inside me. I can't understand it. I don't want to understand it. I'm sorry I read it."

"-Rebecca West, introspect
--Prose Poem 3, by Pablo Neruda

"There are days and there are days, days like that, when even the sun will pass away, and everything you have seen in a dark, and everything you feel has become hardened like a waterfall of ash. So many things are ending and you know that after they have all disappeared, yet you feel like staying. And when that time comes, it seems so good to leave behind what was, and wander through the vast landscape that has been made out of so many different and terrible things."

"-Camus, The Stranger "It is the only thing that does not decay. It has no past… It is the only reality I know."
Maxim's epigraph.
