In this paper, we have assessed the effects of different variables on the incidence and mortality rates due to perforated peptic ulcer (PU) disease. The results showed that the rates of both incidence and mortality have significant variations according to gender, type of age structure, and unemployment. It is, however, noteworthy that the rates of incidence and mortality vary significantly in dependence upon sex, whereas only the differences between the two rates are significant in the cases of age-specific and unemployment-specific rates. It is also significant to mention that there is no significant difference between the two rates in relation to the level of education. What it's like to live in the half-rural, half-suburban south eastern suburbs of Sydney, Australia. Sunday, November 29, 2009 Stockdale Park holds another fundraiser Just as it has over the last few years, Stockdale Park in town (yes I know it's on the wrong side of the river) will be holding a fundraising event to benefit the RSPCA. This time around it's called a "Society night" in the park. Cathy of Pittwater Dog Owners had planned the event and thanks to her help we've been allowed to use part of the park (which is actually quite small), how exciting! The flyer is all about the "free" BBQs and we're told the BBQ will be at 4.30pm each day so it won't start much earlier than that. Today, in my dreams, I'm informed that it will be started by a red flag on the day and a brief service for all those who want to take part. On this day, the main stage would be fo
