The US is the world's largest importer of coal, and roughly 80% of that coal imports are from China. The use of coal in China has grown significantly in recent years, and the government plans on adding more capacity to build coal-fired power plants in the future. That has led the US to seek to increase its own domestic coal production so that it could meet its own demand for such fuel, and even be able to export it to China. Just now, China has revealed that the country plans on reducing the amount of coal imported to the US by 10% by 2020. The reduction comes as China has added to its own domestic coal capacity by adding some 42 gigawatts since 2010. To put this in perspective, the US currently has about 300 gigawatts of coal-fired power generation. What Does This Mean? The reduction in China's coal imports into the US is due to China's recently announced plan to reduce the amount of coal-fired energy that's produced. But the US is currently looking to ramp up coal production from domestic sources to meet demand for coal and even potentially for export to China. This is because while the US will continue to face challenges in meeting its own domestic energy production needs with coal, it is currently the largest exporter of the fuel to China. Theoretically, the reduction in coal imports into the US by China could make China more reliant on coal exports from the US. That could change if China decided to find other ways to produce energy like through nuclear, or natural gas. "When the export opportunities decline for foreign coal, it will have to face domestic coal – making them more reliant on domestic coal." This is as the United States currently produces about 38 billion tons of coal per year. Of that, some 9.8 billion tons are exported. Those amounts are expected to decrease with the impact of carbon policies and new regulations. In response to the reduction in Chinese coal exports, the US has decided to look into increasing domestic coal production to meet domestic demand and potential export needs. And, yet, some in the US are concerned that increasing domestic coal production will lead to increased coal consumption in the US. This is because domestic production can lead to higher domestic coal prices which in turn could lead to higher electricity prices. But increasing domestic coal production is, at this point, expected to increase US energy independence. China�

Q: Passing parameters from a model Based on the response that I have I am doing some filtering/sorting etc. If the response is empty then nothing happens, if it is null then it returns an error about missing parts. I want to be able to do the same filtering/sorting etc on the ajax call that fires. $.ajax({ type: 'GET', url: '{!! app_path("manage_product", $product->id)!!}', data: {var: 'test'}, success: function(response) { if (response.id!== null){ // Do some filtering here } } }); I know it doesn't work like that but is there a way I can pass a parameter to the $product so I can do some filtering/sorting on it before it gets returned? A: You can use the parameter $product in your success callback. Example: var product = {id: 3}; $.ajax({ type: 'GET', url: '{!! app_path("manage_product", $product->id)!!}', data: {var: 'test', param: $product }, success: function(response) { if (response.id!== null){ // Do some filtering here } } }); Boris Johnson insisted at prime minister's questions on Wednesday he would not deliver on his promise to help the DUP exit the European Union and secure a post-election deal to form a government. "The first thing I'm going to do as Prime Minister is to deliver on Brexit. That is what I ran on." Later, when questioned again on whether he would support a confidence and supply deal, the prime minister said no. "I don't believe in a confidence and supply deal. I don't believe that you need to have somebody like me on the opposition benches to give a guarantee to the DUP." But he went
