Ev1938 was the first single-chip version of the AudioPCI sound card, released in 1999. Like the AudioPCI, it also has a built-in DSP codec and the built-in effects processors are a bit more complex than in the older versions. The card has an integrated 8-bit D5/S/PDIF output, with a maximum frequency of 44.1 kHz, which allowed very powerful sound processing, especially with the DSP in addition to the standard working volumes from 0 to 80, the volume can be increased to +100 to +120 dB using two LEDs. Ev1938 sold exclusively in the US, where its retail price was $199. This model was supported until 2005. This video in which I use one of my old HP ES1371 cards and make it work with a USB adapter and connect it to my WaveBlaster 12 USB amp. I then use this amp to push some beats to a speaker. Make sure you burn it to an Audio CD and then you can make a cover using iTunes/Winamp and burn it to a disk. You can customize it to your liking or maybe build a DJ setup.
