

is there any way i can use the geowizards tools available in the toolbox outside of the arcpy environment to get around this issue. i know i can export the geowizards tools to a different arcpy module and run them from there but i would really prefer not to. i know that arcpy has some functionality with the "filegdb" module that allows for loading geodatabase and vector files. can i use that functionality to load in the et geowizards toolbox? i could not find anything about this in the arcpy documentation but i am just curious if this is possible. i just ran into another issue. as i was working on a script yesterday i loaded a toolbox from a geodatabase into arcpy.mapping. the et geowizards toolbox from the geowizards site-package is also in the geodatabase i am using. when i load the toolbox into arcpy.mapping i get a runtime error that says something like "invalid path name or file name". is there a way around this error? it seems like this toolbox is not compatible with the arcpy.mapping module. i also tried loading this toolbox into arcpy.sa and i get the same error. i tried loading this toolbox into the arcpy.gdb module but it also does not work. i cannot use the arcpy.importtoolbox because the path to the et geowizards toolbox is on a network drive that i cannot access. i would really prefer to use the toolbox in the arcpy environment rather than importing it and running it within the arcpy environment. the purpose of this add-in is to create and store your geodatabases. the arcgis add-in for sql server will save your work, increase efficiency, speed up the creation of your databases, and give you the ability to share your work and data with others. it will also allow you to import and export data from sql server to your geodatabase with out using arccatalog.
