The final steps of this move are still underway. Our industry experience is that it is the nature of the beast for part of a product to be replaced by a new release while another part is being stabilized. For those who want to continue working with the legacy 3D features, there will be a transition path provided until consumers move to the new native 3D features. In the final stages of the transition, we will be providing an updated legacy 3D feature set as an additional option for people who prefer to continue working with those features. In addition, we will continue to support the legacy 3D feature set as long as the user is on a supported platform and version of Photoshop, and until the end of time on any supported Mac OS X version. For example, if a user's 32-bit OS X 10.9.4 installation is supported until 1 January 2023, then the legacy 3D products will be available in the CS5, CS5.1, and CS6 versions of Photoshop for use until Feb 1 2023. Adobe is phasing out the 3D features in parallel with the transition to the new 3D tools and APIs. The final releases of the Photoshop 3D product line, including the Photoshop 3D panel and tools, will be cancelled. For now, Photoshop 3D tools and assets will continue to work and be supported, but new development and features will not be added, and will be deprecated in future releases. The Photoshop 3D panel will be deprecated soon, but the panels in other applications will be kept otherwise forward-compatible with the new, simplified panel design.
